Prototype construction commences ...

Posted by: PRALAY in Untagged on Aug 21, 2009

To build the prototype we took apart the old prototype we built. We needed the rods to help constructing the new prototype. It a moment of joy for most of us because it was the first step towards our Vehicle. It was a moment of sorrow cause it was the first thing constructed painstakingly by our senior Baja Team.

We have distributed responsibilities such as purchase of materials, transport of the purchased goods, accounting and others among ourselves and are now gonna start constructing on Monday ...

We made it to the Final round at last Now is when the fun and work begins

We had an interview at Hindustan engineering College and made it to the final stage which is actually constructing the Baja Vehicle ...

Before we jump into the construction of the main vehicle, we plan to build a prototype and use it for testing the rollcage design. Then after workin out all the kinks , we will build the actual one ...

Thats all for now .. We'll keep you updated throughout the course of our work .. Thank you !!!

The Scrutiny

Posted by: PRALAY in Untagged on Aug 10, 2009

We attended the team scrutiny at Hindustan College of Engineering on the 6th of August. The other colleges offered a tough competition. We are waiting for the results which should incidentally be out anytime now..

BAJA SAEINDIA : A Journey

Posted by: admin in Untagged on Apr 2, 2009

BAJA a four letter word that creates magic in lives of those who experience it. A phenomenon that has changed several lives, that has given a meaning and a direction to many directionless souls, ignited a passion amongst young hearts and most importantly, made us learn and transform into better professionals and human beings.

Although it may just look like a high profile student competition but it does not stop there, it has got a lot more to do with. A project where budding engineers leave behind their individualities and work together as a unit bonded with emotions and sentiments for each other and filled with the passion of doing something meaningful out of their monotonous college lives. An event where students shun their usual mug up and score practice, put their brains at work and soil their hands to make a four wheeled beauty whom they nurture as their own kid. We fight, we cry, we work, we starve, we suffer, we enjoy and we bond to do what is beyond the imagination for some. For some it's an opportunity, for some it's a joke, for others it becomes a skill set on their resume but for whom it matters it becomes a reason to live, a passion.

BAJA comes to us as a medium to channelize our exuberance which gets wasted in the boorish and impractical education that we sail through our college lives. It all began in September '06 when the first BAJA SAEINDIA was announced. We registered for the event as team NSIT RACERS. The work progressed and soon got selected in BAJA SAEINDIA. Soon we learnt our first lesson, politics. With internal competition in the institute, there ensued a months long war of words and college politics. Our spirits, strength and more importantly our bonding as a team kept us sailing and a passion with which we feared nothing. And without even knowing, the transformation had begun in us. The first prototype of the vehicle was a glimpse of what was to come in the next twelve months, and yeah, it was only a glimpse. Slowly and steadily we progressed with our vehicle, with late night parties(no need to mention what parties I speak of), abusing the organizers out of our frustration though we never meant most of it, fighting with each other, eating and drinking together, playing pranks, getting injured, working in the moonlight under the effect of hibernal winds, celebrating life as it came by at each and every moment. Soon the car began to take shape and so did our emotions and sentiments which stand fearless. It had become more of a daily routine of our lives. The journey to pithampur, the preparations and the visit has ever lasting memories in our minds. It gave me my first job, an internship, a several dozens of friends and abuses from my team mates for screwing up the powertrain which made us lose out at the event, but it literally didn't matter, except, for some it was a reason to pick on me. The participation as a team has many fond memories which would last forever in our minds and our heart.

Registrations

Posted by: PRALAY in Untagged on Mar 25, 2009

The registrations for BAJA ASIA 2010 have been sent today and we are ready to tackle the first phase - The Virtual Baja. In this we have to create a 3D baja vehicle and test it to run under the track conditions of the original Baja. This is to test whether the actual vehical can run in the final competetion. This is a theoretical and virtual testing of the vehicle.

The team has been split into groupss with each group handling each part of the vehicle. The main aim here is to specialize groups in different parts of the vehicle and to improve upon the earlier design. So better get rolling

About Us ...

Posted by: PRALAY in Untagged on Mar 22, 2009

Hey ,

Welcome to our Blog. We are Team Pralay from St. Peters Engineering College. We are a group of students from the 3rd and 4th year of various engineering departments in our college. The team is comprised of some of the best minds of our college SAE (Society of Automotive Engineers) student members. We are registering for BAJA 2010 under the name 'Pralay' which means destruction (to foes) and plan to make it to the top in the competition.

This is our blog where we shall keep you updated on our status as we progress throughout the competition fighting our way to the top. We will keep on updating this blog as often as possible, so please bear with us if no new update are posted for some time.

Thats all for now , Thank you.
